NINETEENTH SUNDAY OF THE YEAR

One of our modern afflictions which is a hazard not only to our mental and physical health, but especially to our spiritual health, is the constant activity that seems to fill so many of our lives. There never seems to be a lack of things to do. Busyness has become the mark of life in our time. And while we do not want to become lazy and non-productive, there is a danger in not being able to stop and reflect on our lives. The danger can be immense. It is the danger of losing ourselves, of becoming shallow people, concerned only with outward appearances, with owning things, with being well thought of. Elijah searches for God in a strong wind, in the earthquake and in the fire, and still does not find God. It is only when a gentle breeze passes by that Elijah steps to the entrance of the cave and finds God in the "sound of sheer silence." Each of us must be convinced of the need to step out of the fast flowing river of our life, and sit quietly on the bank, wondering what it is all about. We need to look at ourselves, our wives and husbands, our children and friends, through eyes that are not distracted by activity that seems to take up so much of our energy. Once we have convinced ourselves of the need to hear the "sound of sheer silence", then we will find a way to solitude and prayer and peace of mind.
